Job Situation in Urban Poverty Shows Great Improvement in '68

WASHINGTON - The unemployment situation in the poverty neighborhoods of the nation's largest cities improved in the third quarter of 1968, according to the Department of Labor's latest report. The report shows that the unemployment rate in these neighborhoods was down from 20.4% in the second quarter to 17.0% in the third quarter. This is a significant improvement, and is the first time in several years that the unemployment rate has dropped below 20.0%.

The report also shows that the unemployment rate in the nation as a whole was down from 6.5% in the second quarter to 5.7% in the third quarter. This is also a significant improvement, and is the first time in several years that the unemployment rate has dropped below 6.0%.

The report attributes the improvement to a combination of factors, including increased government spending, higher wages, and improved job training programs. The report also notes that the improvement is most pronounced in the larger cities, where the unemployment rate was down from 22.9% in the second quarter to 19.0% in the third quarter. This is a significant improvement, and is the first time in several years that the unemployment rate has dropped below 20.0% in the larger cities.
